

Faraji's New Home

Faraji was a 10 year old boy from Tanzania. He was an orphan who spoke Swahili. He went to live in an orphanage because his parents couldn't take care of him anymore. He had dark skin, and his favorite sport was dodgeball, which he played with the kids in his class, and with the kids at the orphanage.

One day, Faraji got adopted by a nice, young couple from New York City. He was happy, sad, and nervous. He was happy because he had new parents. He was sad because he was going to miss Tanzania, and he was nervous because he didn't know anything about the United States.

This meant Faraji had to move. It was a very long flight from Tanzania to New York City. They went to live on the 60th floor of a huge apartment building.

Faraji learned a lot in his new world. He was adjusting very well, but he missed his old friends. He started going to school, and he made some new friends. He discovered that they play dodgeball, too, and that made Faraji feel content. Faraji is enjoying life in New York City.
